III. Public Participation: Cynthia Cobb stated that she was very excited about Woodlawn when she selected it for her daughter but now, she has several concerns. She wants more structure at the school. She said that her daughter has been failing math for the last 6 months, and her perception is that 75% of her daughter’s class is failing math. She believes that the male math teacher is on top of his teaching, but a gap still exists. On a day that she arrived at Woodlawn to participate as a parent, she was initially turned down. When she was finally allowed to enter the classroom, she said that she did not see an instructor in 2nd period and observed students letting other students onto the 3rd floor after the bell rang. She stated that her daughter received over 25 tardies for one class and yet she, the mother, never received a phone call about these tardies. She also said that she heard that a teacher was fired but she does not know the reason. The school must ask themselves why they are not able to keep good instructors? Teachers need accountability.
